

LEONIDAS KANELLOS

silent ashes

I photographed an olive grove estate after a fire had swept through it.

The olive trees were burned to the ground, yet what remained was striking: their trunks stood like disembodied forms scattered across the slopes. Some of these trees were more than 400 years old—silent witnesses to generations of history.

Their gnarled trunks, once shaped by time and care, were reduced to blackened remnants, hollowed and scarred. It was not only the land that burned, but a legacy as well—a story of patience, stewardship, and tradition erased by the flames in a matter of moments.

ZOFOS.NET / ASHES

specter

shapes

fossilized

desolate

witness

absence

scar

exhale

void

gouged

trace

bleak

monument

stark

skeleton

silhouette

limbo

void

hollow

negative

barren

ZOFOS.NET